What to do if you're hit by an uninsured driver

If you're hit by an uninsured driver the most important thing to do is to collect as much detail as you can about them, because it is a criminal offence to drive without insurance the police will be very interested in any details you can pass onto them. Aside from that, the thing to do is just claim as you normally would through your insurance company who will then deal with the claim and settle it for you. There is a body called the Motor Insurance Bureau which is set up to cover the costs of uninsured drivers and all insurance companies have to pay an annual fee to that bureau.
